UNION ELECTRIC STORY

The story of Union Electric is a long and complicated one. It involves little known heroes, electrical storms, dare-devil aerial acrobatics, ecological crusades and a whole lot of rum and gin. Bear with us and we'll touch on a few of the main ideas and then tie them together nicely in a really beautifully crafted statement that makes it all so clear.

We begin in the earliest days of Australia's ... 'settlement' ? Not sure what we are calling it these days, but when the English started shipping people over. Under the original 'leadership' the mostly drunken troops and convicts in Sydney were a bit upset when their rum rations were taken away from them, so they mutinied against their Governor. This led to Governor Maquarie dropping in to put things right and is sometimes known as the 'Rum Rebellion'. Rum continued to be a thing, but it wasn't such an issue anymore.

A little while later in the early 1800s, when a young Mr. Batman, while taking a break from setting up Melbourne, discovered that rum made the idea of grazing sheep a lot more tolerable. This was before the Bat Mobile was even a basic idea, so drink driving wasn't an issue and his horse didn't mind him having a few, so long as he regularly fed it apples. Hang on, which Batman are we talking about ?

So far so good. I'm not sure how accurate some of this is, but I learn by observing others. At least my fake news is slightly interesting and I don't have any political responsibility that involves nuclear weapons.

Much later, when electrical power came along and light bulbs started being a thing, someone had the bright (lol) idea of building a coal burning power plant, not far from here on Lonsdale Street. It made a bit of a mess, so it was shut down. The power infrastructure is still all along Heffernan Lane and the name of that original company was the Union Electric Lighting Company.

How does all of this seemingly random information tie in ? Well, let me tell you: John Batman, as one of the founders of this great city and rum being such an important part of Australia's history led us to...

Hang on ! I forgot to mention Shayne, Elle, Sam, Simon, Andrew, Don The Beachcomber, Dan & Kyle !

Well, we might have to talk more about them all later.
Anyway, we have to leave it here. I have to go. Monkey Magic is on.

Have a rum !
Cheers !

P.S. This story is mostly ridiculous.
